

Pertinent Paragraphs

Judging from accounts of automobile accidents which form a large part of the day's news one is almost forced to the conclusion that the blame may be traced, in most instances, to a too weighty foot on the accelerator. The present day automobiles are just a little too fast for existing highways and traffic control. There is one sure way to curb the speed demons and that is by adopting the same regulation which is in effect in Sweden. There officials of the government, after putting a governor on an automobile, seal it so the operator cannot exceed 30 miles per hour without breaking the seal. The breaking of the seal involves a heavy penalty. We would not advocate 30 miles per hour as a limit—but if our cars were regulated so as not to exceed 45 miles per hour, with a cut-in which would allow for additional power on the grades, we venture to say that a marked decrease in automobile casualties would become apparent.

The new automobile law will eventually remove a great many rattlebrains and irresponsibles from the highway, but much time will be required to accomplish much in this way. Also to be combatted is the attitude, quite general, of the man we overheard make the following remark: "My car is only worth $20, so why should I carry insurance or worry about crashing into anybody?" Our careless friend has much to learn—and one of the most potent lessons is to try the shoe on the other foot. That would be an entirely different matter, wouldn't it, if someone else crashed into him, and was unable to make financial restitution? There are those who even now do not fully understand the new financial responsibility law, and for the benefit of these people, and for the general refreshing of memory, we herewith set forth the paramount features of the recent legislation: "Under the recently enacted California Automobile Operators and Owners Financial Responsibility Law, effective Aug. 13, 1929, the license and all the registration certificates of an automobile owner or operator will be suspended in the event that any final judgment for damages on account of personal injury or property damage in an amount in an excess of $100 remains unpaid at the end of 15 days after the judgment becomes final. This suspension will remain in effect until the judgment is satisfied, and until the owner or operator produces proof of his ability to respond in damages to the amount of $1,000 for damage to the property of others, $5,000 for injuries caused to any person and $10,000 for injuries caused to more than one person by reason of an accident involving his automobile.

"Such proof of financial responsibility may be evidenced by an automobile policy in the limits as indicated above, a surety bond, or cash collateral in the prescribed amount.

"Under the law it is a misdemeanor for one to operate an automobile while his license remains suspended and the penalty therefor shall be a fine not exceeding $1,000 or one year's imprisonment or both."

According to the Federal Reserve board, the current summer business decline is smaller than that of 1928. There may be truth in the report. We hope so. More important to local business houses, however, is a fair turnover and the prompt collection of accounts this winter. If someone would slip us about an eight-month's sample of this "national prosperity," which is supposed to be increasing yearly, we would be happy. And our faith in statistics might be rejuvenated.

Clara Bow, screen actress, recently accepted a $10,000 engagement ring from Harry Richman, New York. We wonder if the magnificence of the stone will make keener the conubial compatibility about to be entered into by this pair. We have seen a lot of moderately priced stones go on the rocks.

RAY JOHNSON, MISS LOVOI INJURED IN DUAL TIPOVER SAT.

At a late hour Saturday night the automobiles of Ray Johnson, Campbell, and Miss Anna Lovo of Parr avenue featured in a crash on the Los Gatos-Santa Clara road, resulting in the injury of the two principals, who are being treated at the San Jose hospital. With Miss Lovo was her 12-year-old brother, who escaped unscathed. Johnson, driving a light coupe, was accompanied by Rex Griffith, local youth, and the Misses Fay Black and Mabel Roe, of the Hyde and Lantz camps, the latter trio escaping serious injury.

Reports conflict as to the cause of the accident, but that generally accepted is that Miss Lovo, proceeding toward home from the direction of Campbell, had started to make a left turn into Parr avenue when she became confused at the approach on her left of Johnson, who had failed to see her signal, and took to the ditch. Johnson, according to reports, took to the opposite ditch in his move to avoid hitting the other car. Johnson's car turned over several times.

REV. McCONNELL DISCUSSES VISIT IN THE HOLYLAND

Mrs. Jessie McChesney, Grange lecturer, introduced the Rev. Howard McConnell, pastor of the Christian church of San Jose, who was the speaker of the evening at the meeting of Orchard City Grange at Odd Fellows hall last Tuesday evening. The Rev. McConnell gave a very enjoyable and interesting talk on his trip to Europe and the Holy Land from which he had recently returned. One of his chief subjects was the pyramids of Egypt, of which he gave a very good description; also of the cities of Alexandria and Cairo. Rev. McConnell also visited Bethlehem, the Mount of Olives and the Church of the Holy Sepulchre and told many interesting things about them.

At this meeting it was announced by S. N. Hedegard that all persons interested in the forming of a water conservation district should appear the following Thursday at a meeting to be held at the San Jose Chamber of Commerce.

S. N. Hedegard, worthy master, presided over the business meeting. E. Getchel of the farm and orchard committee, told of the advance in prune prices. H. G. Keesling gave a few helpful hints on the care of cut flowers and F. G. Meyers explained the new traffic and liability laws. Several distinguished visitors from the San Jose lodge were present at the meeting.

been halted on a number of ships, plans for a submarine base have been abandoned and contracts for a flock of undersea boats have been cancelled. In other words, indications are that the lion is going to take a nice long nap and doesn't want to be disturbed. A great many people, upon reading the construction we place on the abandonment of naval activities, will rise on their haunches and yell, "Horsefeathers!" We will still hold that our guess is as good as the next person's—and sounds pretty nice, at that. Probably our friends across the sea, instead of taking a nice long nap, will concentrate on a few hundred giant bombing planes and a few dozen airplane carriers.

Several unsanitary conditions existing in Campbell will some day rise to take their toll of humal life. Think of what would happen were we to have a seige of typhoid fever. While incorporation would not assure us an immediate sewer system, it would at least give us power to enforce ordinances designed to do away with all unsanitary conditions in the town. We'll have incorporation eventually—why not now?

That's all.

CHURCH WOMEN HOLD SUCCESSFUL "THRIFT SALE"

The thrift sale conducted by the Congregational guild last week in the hotel was very successful. Many useful articles changed hands, going from those homes where they had become white elephants to others where they were welcome, incidentally adding materially to the funds of the society. Plans are being considered to make this kind of sale a regular affair.

Mr. Clark has changed the name of the establishment to the Clark Drug store. He reports that he is pleased with his new location and expects to be here for some time. Previously he was for several years manager of the Kenyon Drug company in Palo Alto and has also operated a store of his own in the San Joaquin valley. Mr. Clark has been in the drug business for 15 years and is reported to be very proficient in that line.

Mrs. Clark and their two children will remain in Palo Alto for a brief time, but expect to make their home here in the near future.

IMPOSES 30-DAY JAIL SENTENCE; ASSAULT CHARGE

Last Wednesday afternoon in Judge John Blaine's court Manuel Junez was sentenced to 30 days in the county jail. The sentence was the outcome of a charge of assault and battery sworn to by R. Other action of the local court was the fining Saturday of Frank Corey, Jr., who was assessed five dollars for driving his car with a cut-out open. The arrest was made by Officer Barnes.

Little Miss Betty was taken to the San Jose emergency hospital where a number of stitches were taken in a deep scalp wound. After being treated for body bruises she was able to accompany her parents home.

THE NEW MONEY

There has been a mad scramble on the banks to acquire some of the new, unfamiliar, attractive currency. The treasury is prepared to meet the demand only to a limited extent, because of the big problem of distribution.

So if you have not any of these new bills yet, don't be worried. Twelve months from now the old bills will be a curiosity, not the new ones.

The new ones, by the way, are expected to save the government about $1,500,000 a year, due to their smaller size. The new bills are more convenient in every way, make counterfeiting more difficult and are more durable than the old bills, which will improve the sanitary condition of the money we handle.

ANOTHER USE FOR NEWSPAPERS

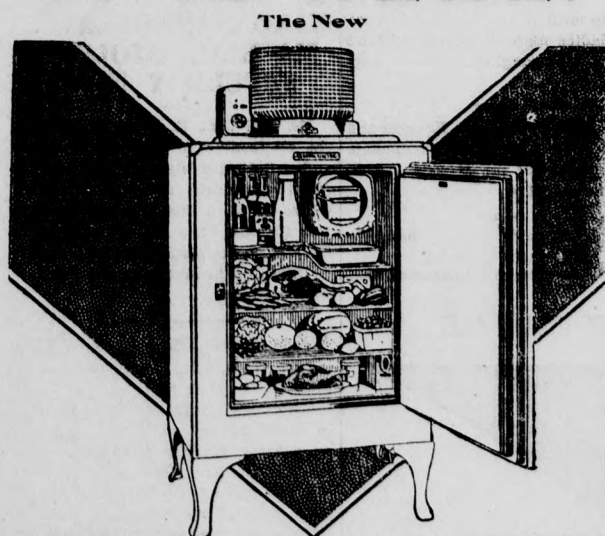

What is more useful than a newspaper? When new, it supplies news and advertising that gives its readers essential information. When old, it is used to wrap things in, in place of a tablecloth at picnics, etc. Now another use has been found that should interest every housewife.

May Kiethline, of the South Dakota State college, has discovered that old newspapers make an excellent substitute for moth-proof bags for storing clothing during the summer months. She says if clothing is wrapped carefully in several thicknesses of newspaper, protection is provided at very small cost. Newspapers make especially good moth-proof wrappings because printers' ink is objectionable to moths.

She recommends that garments be dry cleaned before being stored away for the summer, since soiled clothing attracts moths more than does clean clothing. Garments should also be brushed to remove moth eggs which may have already been deposited. Thoroughly sun the garments—then put them away—and, if you are inclined to believe in the efficacy of Miss Kiethline's idea, use the newspaper.

(P. S. Newspapers also keep businesses from being moth-eaten. The secret lies in wise, effective advertising.)

"Los Angeles!" the sneering preacher cried, as Jonah might have whinnied, "Nineveh!" and with equal scorn. "The Spanish missionaries may have called it the City of Angeles; but the moving pictures have changed its name to Los Diablos! For it is the central factory of Satan and his minions, the enemy of our homes, the corrupter of our young men and women—the school of crime. Unless it reforms—and soon!—surely, in God's good time, the ocean will rise and swallow it!"

Though he was two thousand miles or more away—the Reverend Doctor Steddon was so convinced by his own prophetic fire that he would hardly have been surprised to read in the Monday morning's paper that a benevolent earthquake had taken his hint and shrugged the new Babylon off into the Pacific ocean.

But Doctor Steddon, if he could have seen the realm he objugated, would have confessed that the devil had a certain grace as a gardener and that his minions were a handsome, happy throng. As it was, Doctor Steddon had never seen Los Angeles and had never seen a moving picture. He knew that the world was going to wrack and ruin—as usual—and he laid the blame on the nearest novelty—as usual.

His daughter had heard him lay the blame in previous years on other activities. She wished he wouldn't.

But then she had not escaped blame herself, and she was in a mortal dread now of a vast cloud of obloquy lowering above her and ominous with lightning.

Her father and mother had named her Remember—after one of the Mayflower girls—nearly three hundred years after. Her father often wished that she had been liker to those Puritan maidens. But that was because he did not know how like she was to them, how much lowing week because of hard times. Elwood was to have been promoted to superintendent soon.

To Remember Steddon the news that Elwood would have no job in a week and would know no place to look for one had more than a commercial interest. It was the alarum of fate.

She had loved Elwood since they were children—had loved him all the more for the squalor of his home. He was the son of the town's most eminent drunkard, old "Faldown Farnaby."

Among the slipshod children of his family Elwood alone had managed to acquire ambition. He had latterly supported his mother and a pack of brothers and sisters. He had even been able to afford to go to the war and win the guerdon of a wound that made him glorious in Remember Steddon's eyes and a little more lovable than ever.

Her father, however, had been unable to tolerate the thought of his daughter's marrying the son of the town sot. Doctor Steddon felt that he was proving his love, his loving wisdom toward his daughter, by forbidding her even to meet young Farnaby outside the choir loft. He was sure that her love would wear out.

He did not know his daughter. Who ever did?

Elwood had expected that the bad news would shock her. But he could not understand the look of ghastly terror she gave him. He forgot it in his own bitter brooding and did not observe the deathly white that blanched her pallor.

Yet he had noted that she was paler of late and had added that worry to his backbreaking load of forries.

She coughed incessantly, too, and kept putting her hand to her chest as if it hurt her there.

On the way home under the wasted magic of the rising moon, Remember did not walk as usual between her father and mother

Bretherick drew out the fact, Elwood Farnaby was "the man" and suggested a plan for their marriage when the telephone rang.

The doctor's welcoming "Hello!" broke through a many-wrinkled smile. It froze to a grimace. As Mem watched he kept saying: "Yes... Yes... Yes!" and finally, "That's right—bring him here."

He set down the telephone as if it were a drained cup of hemlock.

"It wasn't Elwood?" Mem said.

"No. Yes. Well—O God! what a bitter world this is!"

Mem caught eagerly at grief.

"Tell me! What's happened? What's happened to Elwood? He's hurt. He's killed."

"Yes!"

It was Dr. Bretherick who afterward found a solution.

"Your cough will take a long time to cure or kill," he said. "But it may come in very handy. I've got it all thought out. You can't stay in this town now, I suppose. Most of the animals crawl away and hide at such times; so suppose you just vanish. Let your cough carry you off to—say, Arizona or California."

She was startled at this undreamed-of escape. He went on:

"I'll tell the necessary lies. That's a large part of my practice. And practice makes perfect. You will go to some strange town—and pose as a widow."

"You will marry an imaginary man out there and let him die quietly. Then if you ever want to come home here, you can come back as Mrs. Somebody-or-other."

He chose Woodville as the name. Mem was to write of Mr. Woodville's devotion, then to describe a hasty marriage and request that her letters thereafter be addressed to her as Mrs. Woodville.

After a brief honeymoon she could eliminate Woodville in some way to be decided at leisure. It would be risky, he said, to let Mr. Woodville live too long.

A hurricane struck the little town of Cavery on the day of Elwood's funeral. When Mem expressed a wish to sing with the choir at the service over their late fellow-singer, her mother cried, "A girl who's got to be shipped out west has got no right to go out in weather like this."

So she stayed at home and stared through the streaming windows. She saw her poor old father set out to preach the funeral sermon.

He had that valor of the priests which leads them to risk death in order to defeat death; to endure all hardship lest the poorest soul go out of the world without a formal conge. Doctor Steddon clutched his old overcoat about him and plunged into rain that hatched the air in long, slanting lines.

Again and again Mem revolted at the outrage of robbing her own parents of their savings—their one shield against old age. She went again and again to Doctor Bretherick and demanded that he release her from her promises not to tell the truth and not to kill herself.

But he compelled her to his will, and she was too glad for a will to replace her own panic to resist him. For a necessary stimulant he prophesied that somehow in that land of gold she was seeking she would find such wealth that she could repay her parents their loan with usury, with wealth, perhaps. Who knew?

He spoke of many women who had begun poor and finished rich. "You might go into the movies, for instance, and make more money than Coal Oil Johnny," he said.

Mem imbibed mysterious tonics at the doctor's office, and always came away buoyed up with the feeling that her tragedy was unimportant, commonplace, and sure to have happy finish.

But the moment she reached home she entered a demesne where everything was solemn, where jokes were never heard, except pathetic old witticisms more important in intention than in amusement.

And at last, one day, quite unexpectedly, when she was under no apparent tension at all, the girl went into Mrs. Steddon's room and said in a quiet tone:

"Mama, I want to tell you something. I'd rather break your heart than deceive you any longer."

"Why, honey! Why, Mem dear, what on earth is it? You can't break this tough old heart of mine. What is it?"

She whispered it so softly that her breath was hardly syllabled.

"Mama, I—I'm going to have—to have a baby."

The shock of the news was its own ether. Mrs. Steddon whispered back, cowering:

"You? You! My baby! You? A baby?"

Mem nodded and nodded until her knees were on the floor and her brow in her mother's lap. Old hands came gropingly about her cheeks. She felt the drip, drip of tears falling into her hair, each tear a separate pearl from a crown of pride.

Then her mother fumbled at the dreadful question:

"But who—who—"

"Elwood!"

Mrs. Steddon's decision was easy, and she made no difficulty of the gross deceptions involved. Her husband must be protected in his illusions and protected from the necessity of wreaking his high moral principles on his own child. His child must be protected from the merciless world and the immediate wrath of the village.

All he said was, "My child!"

they, too, had terrified their parents with their love of finery and romantic experiment.

For it is only the styles, and not the souls, that change. There are chronicles enough to prove that the same quota of the Remember and the Praise-gods of Plymouth and the other colonies suffered the same bitter beatitudes and frantic bewilderments as Remember Steddon and Elwood Farnaby endured when their elbows touched in the choir loft of the mid-Western village.

Miss Steddon felt a sudden tremor in Farnaby's elbow; then it was gone from hers; she saw his thumb nailwhiten as it gripped the hymn book hard.

Something in the words he chanted seemed to stab him with a sense of guilt. He felt it a terrible thing for her to stand before that congregation and cry aloud words of ecstasy over her redemption from sin.

Their secret, unknown and unconfessed, was concealed by the very clamor of its publication. And it troubled Farnaby mightily to be gaining all the advantages of a lie by singing the truth.

When the choir was not singing openly and aboveboard, it was usually busily whispering. Even Elwood Farnaby had to lean over tonight and whisper important news to Remember. He was not permitted to call at her house or to be near her home after the service. Singing beside her in the house of God—that was different. He told her now what he had just learned, that the factory where he was employed would close down the folwith a hand on the arm of each. Tonight she kept at her mother's left elbow and clung so tight to the fat, warm arm that her mother whispered:

"What's the matter, honey?"

"Nothing, mama," she faltered.

"I'm just a little tired, I guess."

Mem again was coughing violently and the rest of the way home Doctor Steddon was not a preacher anxious about his daughter's soul, but a father afraid of her life. The cough to her parents was an ominous problem. To her it might promise a solution.

Next morning at her father's command Mem went to see Doctor Bretherick. She told him that her parents were afraid her cold was more than a cold, and she coughed for him. He asked her many questions and she grew so confused and apt in blushes that he asked her more. Suddenly he flung her a startled look, gasped and stared into her eyes as if he would ransack her mind. In the mere shifting of his eyelid muscles she could read amazement, incredulity, conviction, anger, and finally pity.

All he said was, "My child!"

There could be no solemn conference than theirs. Doctor Bretherick had attended Mem's mother when the girl was born. He thought of her still as a child, and now she dazed and frightened him by her mystic knowledges and her fierce demands that he should help her out of her plight or help her out of the world.

He refused to do either and demanded that she meet her fate with heroism.

A local organization serves your Telephone

Altho your telephone will put you in communication with cities far away, your telephone company is not a far-distant affair. It is in reality a local institution, — its employees and managers are your own neighbors. We who serve your telephone are members of your service clubs, your church, your lodge. Our children go to school with your children. Like you, we are engaged in common tasks of local citizenship.

You permit us to serve your home and business in an important and very personal way. Because we are your neighbors, interested in your interests, and knowing your problems, we know what you expect of your telephone. And we are anxious to see that you get it.

Each year sees a steady advance in the telephone art. But your telephone will never become so efficient that its service to you is not dependent upon the zeal of a human organization, right here in your community, giving intelligent and courteous attention to your wishes.
